

SUICIDE TERROR

What more will it take for the world to act?

1953 - 2007

The horrific murder of former Pakistan Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto is the latest in the unending plague of suicide terror attacks that have murdered thousands of innocents and destroyed tens of thousands of families across the globe.

We call on the United Nations General Assembly to hold a special session to deal exclusively with the scourge of suicide terror.

Unless we put suicide bombing on top of the international community's agenda, this virulent cancer could engulf us all. The looming threat of WMDs in the hands of suicide bombers will dwarf the casualties already suffered in 30 countries.

Suicide bombings should be designated Crimes Against Humanity.

At the end of WWII, when the unprecedented brutality of the Nazi death camps was discovered, the world responded by declaring those acts Crimes Against Humanity. We must find the courage to do the same – to use the rule of law to stop all enablers of suicide terror.

Religious leaders must act. They can no longer ignore the fact that most suicide terrorists are believers.

Suicide terrorists believe they act in God's name and enter paradise as holy martyrs. Religious leaders must use every sermon and every publication to denounce this belief as nothing less than an abomination of faith and a perversion of all that is godly.
